DESCRIPTION

The building was restored between 2006 and 2009, taking into account the simple but important details that make this building unique.

The stones, arches, door posts, friezes, cells, beams, were all restored by master craftsmen during the restructuring, while always respecting and following ancient traditions: the roof is made with reeds and old tiles, the floors and the pool are made of cement, the shutters are made of iron and the furniture is in the ancient rural tradition.

The lighting system has been set up using only low consumption elements, and the visual impact, both inside and outside the building, is so soft that it reminds us of the natural light of old candles. But technology and comfort are also very important. All the rooms include air conditioning and under floor heating systems, new generation electrical household appliances, use of industrial kitchens, satellite TV and Wi-Fi.
